Life is good (even without the Internet)

Hello readers! I'm finally back after a month without the Internet. I know it sounds crazy but there was a reason why I wanted to try this. 1) And actually, the results were quite fascinating.

Here's what I did: for a whole month I didn't go online at all. 2) That meant I could send text messages and make calls, so I wasn't giving up technology altogether. Despite that, it was a lot harder than I had expected it to be. The first few days were the hardest. I felt alone and a bit lost because I couldn't follow what was going on with my friends by reading their social media pages. To tell you the truth, this made me feel really anxious. On these days I was constantly checking my phone. I checked it a lot more than usual, actually. 3) It was very strange.

As time passed, things got easier and I started to do other activities. 4) I was definitely more organised about my free time, which was a good change. This experience has helped me to understand that I don't want to live without the Internet but at the same time, I don't want to live only on the Internet, either!

Post a comment

- I would pick it up without thinking.
- I read, played tennis and arranged to see friends more often.
- There were so many reasons for not using the Internet.
- I did it as a psychological experiment.
- However, I did use my mobile phone.

Unusual Schools

- A At the Brooklyn Free School in New York students play a special role in learning. They create their own timetable and decide on the subjects, skills and learning tools they want to learn and use. Students are in charge of their learning while teachers are there to assist when asked. Students are free to learn in groups or individually with high-tech learning tools.
- B It may look more like an office than a school with all its work stations, but the Carpe Diem School in Arizona believes every student is different. Students work at their own private work stations that have a computer. Teachers move about the classroom checking in on each student as they work at their own speed, taking as much time on each subject or skill as they need.
- C It looks like one huge classroom at Orestad School in Denmark. Students learn in a large open glass building where they move from one space to another. There are circular areas with sofas and soft chairs where they can sit alone or in groups to really think and apply their knowledge in new ways. Teachers guide students as they design and think of new ideas as well as new solutions to problems.

In this school
1	teachers help students only when needed.
2	students develop strong creative thinking skills.
3	learning spaces are for individual students only.
4	students choose what and how they learn.

Monica,
I'll try to answer your question about what camera your friend should buy for his photography lessons. In my opinion, it would be best for him to choose a used camera at this time. Not only would it be much cheaper, but he would also be able to make a better choice after he has taken the lessons. This is because the photography lessons will teach him how to use a camera, so he will know better what type of new camera he wants later. After all, everyone likes different things. I hope that helps. Call me if you have any other questions.

Hi Tom!

I just got a message from my photographer friend Stacy about buying a camera for your photography lessons. She advises that you buy a 1) camera instead of a new one. They are obviously less expensive but more importantly, you will learn how to use a camera in your lessons and then you will have a 2) idea of what you want when you buy a new camera. I have attached a link below that shows 2 cameras for sale. They are both the 3) but the second one has a zoom lens. Have a look. Let's talk soon.

ABOUT US ...

Children First is a charity that began in 1992. It was started by four nurses who wanted to do more for the children of their community. Today, it has grown into a large organisation that is involved in many activities in the community to improve health and education for disadvantaged children.

Children First organises events to raise money to support local health agencies that care for sick children and children with disabilities. We also advise the government on improvements to health services for children. But this is only one of the areas where we are active. Our volunteers also give their time in our Let's Read Together class that provides reading assistance to children who need extra help. We have an after-school programme to help out with other educational needs, too.

We would like to thank our volunteers for all their hard work, without them our valuable support would not be possible.

A Great Idea

When Richie Stachowski was 11 years old, he went on holiday with his family to Hawaii. One day, Richie and his dad went swimming in the ocean. They were both wearing masks so that they could see while underwater. Richie wanted to talk to his dad about the beautiful fish they were seeing, but of course, that was impossible. Later, Richie's dad told him that no one had yet invented a way to talk underwater.

Inspired, Richie started researching online and designing. After many experiments, he managed to invent a gadget that allows people to talk to each other underwater from a distance of up to 4.5 metres. It is a simple gadget, made from plastic cones, mouth parts that look like those on a snorkel, and a membrane to keep water out. It took him about a month to build the first one. He called it a 'water talkie'.

But Richie didn't just make a water talkie, he also sold his idea. He was very successful at this and a major toy company ordered 50,000 of them. Then, Richie started inventing other gadgets and toys and soon he had created his own toy company. His advice to other young inventors: 'If you think you have a good idea, just go for it!'

- 1 Richie got the idea for his invention while with his family in Hawaii.
 2 Richie had to do a lot of before he was able to invent the gadget.
 3 People using Richie's gadget can underwater.
 4 Richie invented other gadgets after selling his first invention.

14 An Incredible Place!

Hi Everyone! I am really excited to tell you about the place that I just returned from. Today I went to the Acropolis in the center of Athens, Greece. I went in the late afternoon, when it was not so hot. I was already in the centre of Athens, so I walked to the Acropolis, through a beautiful park. It was an amazing experience. While I was there I explored the ancient site, and took a lot of photographs. My favourite thing was the feeling of being somewhere so ancient, where so many other people had been before.

The Acropolis is a very special place, and I recommend that all of you go if you get the chance!

 Hi Sam!
 I'm really excited about your party! I'm afraid I'm going to be late, though. I have basketball practice until 6 pm, so I can't come until 6:30. I'm sorry about that.
 I have a question. Can you tell me how to get to your house? I know it's near the park but I don't remember exactly where it is. Also, would you like me to bring a dessert to the party? I can make chocolate chip cookies, if you want. I love to cook.
